INTRODUCTION

The outbreak of Coronavirus (Covid-19) is heightening our awareness of the challenges an illness, viral or otherwise, may cause for older adults and those who struggle with health conditions, loneliness, and isolation.

With changes now occurring on a daily basis, staff in healthcare settings are finding new, more flexible ways of working and we are starting to see how these positive changes are impacting on how we deliver the most appropriate, coordinated and compassionate care for those who are most vulnerable.

As far as we know dementia itself does not increase the risk for Covid -19, the respiratory illness caused by the new coronavirus, however, dementia-related behaviours, increased age and common health conditions that often accompany dementia may do so.

There is lots of publicly available information on Covid – 19 provided by many organisations.

We would recommend that people with dementia, carers and family members follow the guidelines provided by the HSE.

This list is by no means exhaustive, and will be updated regularly in time with new developments. If you have a trusted resource that has been helpful to you, do let us know by emailing dementia.office@hse.ie and we can update this information.

We have separated the information into three themes – Medical, Practical and Emotional – and included helplines and links to other helpful organisations.

We hope this guide can help you to stay safe, well and connected during this time of crisis.

MEDICAL

Covid - 19 is a new disease and therefore questions around how it affects our health, how we can avoid it spreading and how to protect each other may arise.

Recommendations such as hand washing, self-isolation and cocooning may be difficult to understand or remember for a person with dementia and practical guides, posters and videos can help people to retain the information.

In addition it can be helpful to plan for any emergency that may arise.

PRACTICAL

When following the government's advice on how to reduce the risk of Covid – 19, supporting a person with dementia in the home or from a distance may be challenging. At the same time keeping up activities, staying physically and emotionally well is especially important and keeping up healthy routines and conducting meaningful activities together can be helpful.
